

ABSTRACT

The liquid crystal display (LCD) includes a gate line formed on a transparent substrate and a data line crossing the gate line. An insulating layer electrically insulates the data line from the gate line. A thin film transistor is formed at an intersection of the gate line and the data line, and is connected to the gate line and the data line. A low reflective layer is formed on at least a portion of the data line.